Which would explain...

"The Mises PAC is a GOP "infiltrate and neuter" operation aimed at ensuring there aren't any libertarian alternatives to whatever authoritarians the Republican Party puts up for various offices. That's its goal. That's its purpose."

The regime in Washington claims NATO exists to douse the fires of foreign war, but history proves it has only fanned the flames. It's the largest entangling alliance in the world, and we have no tolerance for it.

It's time to hinder the American empire and #AbolishNATO

The LPMC is made up more of people who seek the approval of ideological racists (and take it as a contrarian badge of honor when they get mistaken for ideological racists themselves) than it is of actual ideological racists.

Arguably, that's more pathetic.

One could argue whether a statement with no legal impact should have been in a political platform, but... if adding it there (with no actual impact) was mere "virtue signalling", then how should one describe ostentatiously removing it? "racism signalling"?

In the month of May, ending with the convention, LP National gained roughly 150 new members, however over 1,000 either dropped their membership or let it lapse. Year over year, total national membership is down almost 20%. This is unprecedented.

Dear Mr. Harris, Ms. McArdle, and the LNC,

This serves as my official letter of resignation as the Communications Director for the Libertarian Party. It has been the honor of my life.

My expected last day will be Friday, July 15th, 2022.

I came to the Libertarian Party in the second wave of the Ron Paul Revolution. I remember sitting on my very progressive friend's couch in Chicago watching the 2012 Republican Primary Debate and hearing Dr. Paul speak for the first time. Once home for the night I turned to Google to try to understand why everything he said sounded different and so much better than that coming from the other Republicans. A day later I was back at that same friend's home telling her, "I think I'm a libertarian."

I didn't even know there was a Libertarian Party at this time, but a few months later I took my first libertarian step when I wrote in Ron Paul on my presidential ballot.

Within the next year I would move back to Texas, meet my first Libertarian friends, and start getting involved in my new political home. I cut my libertarian baby teeth in the Liberty Memes and Libertarian Christian Institute Facebook groups. I soon became the Secretary of my county party, and started baking a cake each August 20th to celebrate Ron Paul's birthday. I was all in.

But that was only the beginning of my journey. I came into the Libertarian Party still firmly gripping certain statist positions I couldn't seem to let go of on my own. Looking back, I am lucky that I spent little time on Twitter back in those days; because it wasn't trolling or brash responses or harsh accusations that moved me from the "America is the good guy in all the wars" – "We obviously need to control the border and immigrants need to get in line" – "If you've done nothing wrong the police won't bother you" – baby libertarian, to the anti-war, free movement of peaceful people supporting, authority resisting, proud Libertarian that I am today.

It was thoughtful conversations with beautiful Libertarians who took the time to understand my positions and gently challenge my thinking that took the spark of liberty in my heart and grew it to an unquenching flame. That burn for freedom guided me in the roles of County Chair, State Vice Chair, and eventually National staff.

Throughout inter-party bickering and caucus wars, I focused on my job and my passion for communicating the peace and prosperity that can only come from liberty. I sought to find new ways to explain the logic of opposing government overreach, especially in the form of endless wars. It was then a particularly sad day when I heard a prominent anti-war author I had long appreciated referred to people like me – not aligned with a certain faction – as "a cancer that needs to be cut out" of the party. That hurt – but I don't hero worship, so I got back to work.

It is still time for me to remain focused. I know that I must continue using respect and empathy for my fellow humans of every background to point out the evil of the duopoly and light the path to liberty. My voice is not the voice with which this LNC wants to speak. That's okay. I know as long as there are people being victimized by the state, there will be a place for my voice. I need to go find that place now.

In Liberty and Peace,
Bekah Congdon

Lovely people.

Hoppe literally made a whole enthusiastic speech about the alt-right and how "peace love liberty" is stupid and "strife, hate, struggle and fight" is so much better" by Lichtschlag as "Friede, Freude, Eierkuchen." In stark contrast to this, Alt-Righters insist that life is also about strife, hate, struggle and fight, not just between individuals but also among various groups of people acting in concert. "Millennial Woes" (Colin Robertson) has thus aptly summarized the Alt-Right: "Equality is bullshit. Hierarchy is essential. The races are different. The sexes are different. Morality matters and degeneracy is real. All cultures are not equal and we are not obligated to think they are. Man is a fallen creature and there is more to life than hollow materialism. Finally, the white race matters, and civilization is precious. This is the Alt-Right."

Absent any unifying theory, however, there is far less agreement among the Alt-Right about the goal that it ultimately wants to achieve. Many of its leading lights have distinctly libertarian leanings, most notably those that have come here (which, of course, was the reason for having invited them here), even if they are not 100%-ers and would not identify themselves as such. All Alt-Righters that have appeared here, for instance, have been familiar with Rothbard and his work, all the while the most recent presidential candidate of the Libertarian Party had almost all of their Michigan members the best; it will be for them to save our party in the years ahead.

The same, however, cannot be said for their leadership. The amount of grift, ideological rot, nastiness and outright prejudice which I have seen in the higher ranks of the Mises Caucus simply cannot be ignored. I do not believe that these people have the best interests of the liberty movement at heart. To be blunt, I don't think they care one iota about creating a world set free in our lifetime. To the contrary, their actions have established that they would burn the national and state parties to the ground if only to have dominion over the ashes and the opportunity to monetize every smoking ember. And I suspect they will soon get their wish.

Most distressingly, I question the extent to which the Mises Caucus and its leadership is actually committed to the Libertarian Party and its affiliates. The fact that leaders have consistently suggested an openness to not running candidates against Republican opponents, running farcical candidates (see New Hampshire), and taking steps which intentionally alienate older members and generous donors, leads me to honestly suspect that the end of the Libertarian Party as we know it is not just a danger of their stewardship, but a goal.

And I can't take it anymore.

LP National chimed in with an astonishingly terrible take.

country with those who support the dismemberment of babies in the womb?

Pro-choicers, why share a country with those who would take a woman's right to abort away?

To any women who have had an abortion: the vice chair of the Libertarian Party thinks you should be sentenced to the same term of imprisonment as a murderer.

John Hudak
Joshua Smith what do you think the criminal penalty for having an abortion should be?

What information should the state have access to in order to investigate women who may be seeking or have gotten an abortion in the post Roe world?

Search engine data, phone records, GPS data?
Should we set up police task forces to investigate instances of when a miscarriage occurs for possible foul play?

But let's be generous and suppose @joerogan was only talking about how DeSantis has handled the Covid Pandemic. Okay- well, in terms of per capita deaths by state, Florida is the 2nd worst state--just doing slightly better than West Virginia.

Among other things, "enthusiastically supporting a guy who worked at Guantanamo Bay without apology" really should be an "are we the baddies?" moment perfectly tuned to anyone who was an LvMI libertarian in the 2000s.

So long, @LPNational. It could've been great.

Hello!
I am a long time card-carrying member of the Libertarian Party. While I continue to support policies that promote individual freedom and limited government, and greatly value a political alternative to the Republican and Democratic Parties, I cannot in good conscience continue to be a member of the Libertarian party in its current incarnation. The LP's messaging over the past few months has devolved into sophomoric, distasteful trolling aimed at "owning" the major parties rather than articulating a persuasive argument for individual liberty. I have always valued the LP for its tendency to remain above culture wars and transient issues of the day while continuing to advance thoughtful and compassionate solutions for advancing human flourishing. This is no longer the case. Please cancel my membership to the Libertarian Party.
Sincerely,
Ileana Almog

Sadly, Yang is right. Now that the Libertarian Party is a GOP subsidiary, and the major donors have all left, the LP is no longer relevant in US politics even as a spoiler.

Dumpster fire update: at least a half-dozen state LPs have split into competing factions both claiming to be the real party. And the national party has abandoned any pretense of following its bylaws, instead just siding with whichever side happens to be the Mises Caucus people.

Now it posts tired Republican-lite culture war talking points.

New coms director equals more word salad, virtue-signaling tweets. 🙄

The LP doesn't need BASED communication. We need messaging that is honest, clear, relevant, and professional, communication that expands the base rather than focuses on riling up the terminally online.

The New Mexico affiliate of the Libertarian Party is taking a hard stand against the Mises-controlled national party's controlling and overbearing behavior. Good for them!

17 August 2022

To the Libertarian National Committee,

In response to the letter from the Libertarian National Committee Chair, dated Aug 9, 2022: This notice is to inform Libertarian National Committee, Inc that the Libertarian Party of New Mexico is an independent organization and state political party operating as an entity in the State of New Mexico. The Libertarian Party of New Mexico does not recognize any actions, directives, orders, commands, rulings, or any other interference with the internal operations of the Libertarian Party of New Mexico by the Libertarian National Committee or any of its affiliated committees.

The Libertarian Party of New Mexico is asserting legal associational rights in executing the operations of the Libertarian Party of New Mexico under the direction of Libertarian Party of New Mexico leadership and the bylaws of our private organization.

Any actions taken by the Libertarian National Committee that interfere with the autonomy and the independence of the Libertarian Party of New Mexico are not recognized and are not legitimate.

By attempting to interfere with the operations of the Libertarian Party of New Mexico, the Libertarian
